

KELSO'S CHOICE

SUMMER "GOOD CHOICES" KIT

It's a common lament of educators: children go off to summer vacation and return at the start of the following year having lost some of the skills they've worked so hard on during the school year. What to do?

That's where Kelso's Choice comes in. Developed by a school counselor and a school psychologist, it offers simple yet powerful solutions to the problems that cause conflict among children, and here's a quick kit to help students keep making good choices even during the summer.

Note: children should always feel safe coming to an adult for a "BIG" problem, one that makes them feel scared, extremely upset, or unsafe. One of the key components of teaching children the Kelso's Choice System is teaching them how to tell the difference between the two.

Once they understand that difference, they are ready to learn the simple choices that give them the power to solve many of their own problems.

Users report that this system works best when implemented school- or district-wide with parent participation. That's why getting parents in on the "Kelso's Choices" action over the summer can help kids keep them front of mind.

Even a small bit of work with one classroom of children, or one child at a time, can help. Teach the children Kelso's Choices, and train them on when it's time to use them, and you'll begin to see results quickly.

Step 1: Big problems and little problems.

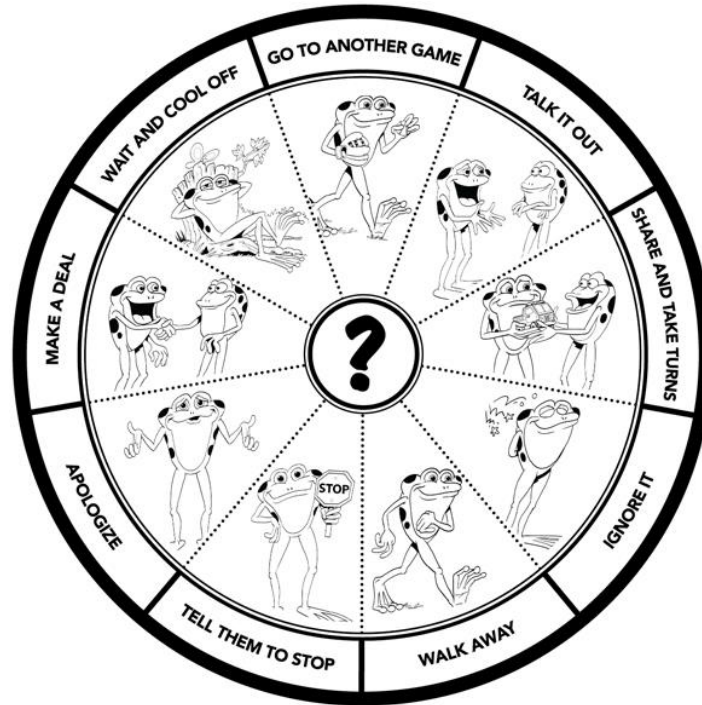

Here are some basic guidelines to teach children the difference between a big problem and a little problem. Our Kelso's Choice Conflict Management Kit has several great activities to drive this point home.

Step 2: Introduce the concept of the Kelso's Choice Wheel

You can teach a couple of choices a day, or one a week. Our Kelso's Choice Conflict Management Kit has several great ideas for how to structure your lessons.

Create a visual reminder of the choices. Some educators like to make a copy of the wheel (below) for each desk, give them to the children to color, share with parents for at-home reinforcement, and much more!

Step 3: Reinforce the concepts!

When tattling occurs (and it will!), train everyone who works with the children to ask: "What two Kelso's Choices did you use?" You'll be amazed how quickly the children pick up on the trend, and begin to ask that of each other (and report proudly to you when they do!).

Thank you for taking the time to give Kelso's Choice a try. We're happy to offer you 10% off any item in the store (including the Conflict Management Kit on which this Free Stop Tattling Kit is based).
